Without Reputation Defender, I wouldn't have decent work. It took hiring a private eye to learn whether applying corporate or Home Depot, the new protocol is to have a PI firm check you out. No emails or electronic trail. Only HR phone calls relay to PIs the prospects, and the retainer contract goes to work processing their backgrounds. Junior Pls may even go to a courthouse to run your All citizens need to take this seriously and make realistic choices. Crappy surveillance internet brokers NEVER stop selling your data. Reputation Defender's technology countermands their behavior because information brokers maintain a "do not publish list," and it's against the law for them to publish your digits if you're on it. The list is proactive, so once established, it helps keep your name clean as any new information is available for whatever reason, such as buying a house. It's also refreshing when Cliff from the advising team calls or emails to check in. It's always helpful as they remind you of a small item to fix, like updating a phone number or something new. For instance, did you know that you "never" give your number unless necessary, like a job application. That's it, don't do it, p.e.r.i.o.d. Cliff et al. have terrible stories about how brutal surveillance technology has become. If you're having trouble getting a job or not getting any calls back, you may need remediation.

It's not a joke. My only goal is to provide objective, spin-free evidence on why protecting your information is necessary for employment and background checks. All the terrible events on the news networks have contributed to this new corporate hiring expense, and it's here to stay. I attest to these facts and Reputation Defender's services.

It's your privacy, and our world is programmed to label you "unforgiven."

In closing:

You inculcate and become like those you associate with, adopting their attitudes, beliefs, and behaviors. Surround yourself with positive, trustworthy individuals and engage in self-criticism to grow, but avoid criticizing others' character or essence.

Avoiding Negativity and Controversy

- Literature indicates:avoid making negative statements.
- find areas of agreement and validation
- evade personal attacks on others.
- Restrain the tendency towards criticism.
- Control unnecessary complaining.
- Display responsiveness without revealing damaging information.
- Show high energy and enthusiasm.

Negativity disguises itself in many ways, such as arrogance, condescension, detachment, excessive complaining, and gloomy outlooks. It's essential to raise awareness of the people and circumstances around you and your current frame of mind and attitude. A single display of a negative attitude, mannerism, or behavior could impregnate a negative lasting impression. Bias harms professional relationships-a strategy of neutrality, nonconformity, and high enthusiasm results in avoiding negativity and engaging in controversy.

Questions:

- 1) How have you expressed negativity in a work setting?
- 2) What were another's reaction?
- 3) Did you change or brush it off?

To develop proficiency in interpersonal relationships, preparation is key. Taking time to get ready, whether it's putting on a suit or adopting a certain demeanor, is important. The key is to STOP, PAUSE, and PREPARE. By doing so, you can ensure that you are mentally and emotionally ready to interact with others in a positive and productive manner.

STOP => PAUSE => PREPARE

Elon Musk in Lex Fridman interview #252 pause for about 90 seconds at one point. Are you able to pause?

Question: Why is pausing imporant?
